Imagining your ideal career in the performing arts can be difficult. Without thorough knowledge of the industry, it's hard to know what options are out there, let alone those that best align with your personal strengths and interests. Throw in external expectations and fears about making enough money, and many young people give up on their calling.

College and career coach, Lee Saville-Iksic, helps young performers clearly articulate their calling, allowing them to make key decisions and preparations for a career that aligns with their strengths, preferences, and core values. Performing artists who do this work early in their career get a head start by avoiding costly missteps and developing self-honoring habits that serve them their whole life.

With a background as a music and theatre educator, professional performer, business owner, and nonprofit arts executive, Lee Saville-Iksic has shown scores of young people a world of possibilities when it comes to their career.

In this interactive webinar, participants will:

- Gain insight into the career design process;
- Learn about the breadth of career options available in the performing arts industries; and
- Ask powerful questions to guide decisions about what to do after high school.
